WASHINGTON ITEMS

Opinions on the Election Vary-- Nothing Certain.

Bank Examiners Cannot Discover Fraud--England and Germany Acting in Good Faith.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26, 1900.

Washington has been slow getting interested in the Presidential campaign, but it has the fever now, and little else is being talked about. Those who base their opinions on known facts and figures, rather than on hopes and expectations that something unexpected will happen between now and election day, or on that day, regard President McKinley's reelection as probable and basing their opinions on past elections, that his party will retain control of the house. It is admitted by the supporters of Mr. Bryan that this opinion is on all fours with the surface indications, but they insist that is wrong and that the surface indications are erroneous because they do not tell how the "silent vote" is going to be cast. They claim that Mr. Bryan is going to get many thousand votes all over the country that have been put down as McKinley votes in the state polls made by the "republicans," and that he is going to be elected. They may be right, but all the signs which have been proven by past campaigns to be dependable in sizing up the result of a Presidential election in advance of the casting and counting of the votes are now certainly favorable to the reelection of President McKinley. Of course every intelligent man knows that nothing is absolutely certain in politics. Commissioner Evans of the Pension Bureau made the following statement this week, in answer to numerous inquiries: "There have been filed 34,000 claims for pension on account of the Spanish-American war. Cells have been made for evidence in 33,424 of these claims. Medical examinations have been ordered in 28,324 claims. The difference between the number of claims filed and the number of medical examinations ordered practically represents the number of widows and dependents claims: 4,237 of these claims have been adjudicated.

If national bank examiners cannot discover defalcations through skillful manipulation of bank books, what are they for? This question is prompted by the comment of Secretary Gage on the defalcation of $700,000 by a trustee-employee of the First National Bank of New York city, made public this week. Said Secretary Gage: "Our examiners cannot be expected to discover an old defalcation when the bank officers themselves have not found or suspected it." The general conception of a national bank examiner is that he is an expert who knows how to discover just what Mr. Gage says he cannot be expected to discover. Well, we live and learn. Of course, Secretary Gage knows the capacity of the examiners employed by the treasury department better than any mere outsider; but all the same, it is a shock to be told that they are no real check upon dishonest bank employees.

Any state which has not been honored by having a battleship named after it is willing to compromise by having its name bestowed upon a monitor can probably be accommodated by communicating its wishes to the secretary of the navy, as it is understood in the navy department that the first state asks to have its name bestowed upon the monitor, now awaiting a name, will have its request granted. It is a case of "first come first served," and only one can be served.

As wide awake as Americans generally are in utilizing any method of advertising that is calculated to increase their business, it has probably not occurred to any of them that an American citizen traveling in a foreign country was a good advertisement for American goods and methods, but the United States consul at Aix la Chapelle, Germany, writes to the department of state, of the visit of an American circus to that city.

"The bill posting was a revelation in this line of work, both in magnitude and character; the way in which the tents were erected and the ground prepared astonished the people; and when the circus itself arrived not a workman went to the factories; the spindles were idle all day. At every performance the tent was full, and the vague antipathy toward the United States has been turned into respect and awe; the people now say: 'Anything is possible to Americans.' Agents for American concerns who would follow in the wake of the circus would find ready sale for their goods."

An important scientific discovery has been reported to the department of state by the United States vice consul general at Frankfurt, Germany. It is a method of treating wood which makes it impervious to water and acids and a perfect electrical conductor. The invention or discovery was made by the inspector of forests at Lamun, France. The wood after treatment is as easy to shape and polish as any ordinary hard wood.

The German charge de affaires at Washington this week made a statement concerning the Anglo-German agreement, in which he said that the agreement involved no menace whatever to any power concerned in China, and that there was no foundation for reports that there was any further or additional features to the agreement beyond those transmitted to the various governments and made public, as that document covered the entire transaction. This seems to dispose of all the talk about England and Germany having designs which would antagonize some of the other powers in the settlement with China. This government has not doubted the good faith of either Germany or England.

CHINESE NAMES.

Each Person in That Country Has a Surname, Which Change with Advancing Years.

Every Chinaman has a "surname," which is supposed to date back nearly, if not quite, to the epoch of the great Emperor Hwangte, 2697 B. C. The Chinese, says the Philadelphia Record, pride themselves much on the possession of these surnames, and no foreigner, not even a countryman of the reigning Manchu sovereign, is allowed to borrow them, or even officially to use his own surname in China.

In addition to this surname, or "sing," as is the Chinese term for it, every Chinaman possesses one or more personal names. In his infant days a designation known as his "milk name" is conferred upon him and subsequently, on arriving at the age of puberty, a "ming," or cognomen, is given him. In after life, more especially if he becomes an author, he takes a "tsze," or literary appellation, and it is by this that he is afterward best known in everyday life and in the literary world. Often he adds one or more "hao," or pseudonyms, to his older names, which not infrequently he uses on the title page of his works; thus considerably adding to the difficulty of identifying him.

The well-known philosopher Choo Ho affords an illustration of the number of names which a Chinaman may accumulate. To his "sing," Choo, was added his "ming," He. Subsequently he adopted the "tsze," Yuen-hway, and Chung-hway, and at different times afterward added the pseudonyms Hway-gaa, "The dark cottage;" Hway-ung, "The obscure man;" Ta'ang-chow, "The old man of the cloudy valley," and Tsz' yang, from the name of his study.

As a rule, high sounding or felicitous names are chosen for the "ming" and "tsze," and as generally the pseudonyms adopted by authors bear deprecatory meanings, or references to their dwellings, as may be gathered from the instance given above. For example, we meet with such "ming" as "The fairy guest," "The pacifier of the age" or "The shield of the empire," while among the pseudonyms we find "The dull scholar," "The obscure student," "The stupid old man," names which, it is needless to remark, are far from indicating humility on the part of those who select them.

It is worth noting that in the relative placing of the name and surname the Chinese practice is the reverse of ours. They put the surname first; we place it last. They say Smith John, whereas we say John Smith.

LOVE LETTERS TO ORDER.

The Strange Occupation Followed by Certain Persons in the City of Mexico.

Perhaps there is no more characteristic sight in Mexico than the so-called "evangelists" who ply their trade in the plazas de Belam and the plaza de Santo Domingo, relates the Mexican Herald.

They write love letters, blackmailing letters and all sorts of letters for those who do not know how to write, at a rate of three, six, nine or more cents, according to the length of the message. They also undertake without extra charge to write the address on the envelope and to attach the required stamp, but for the latter they make an extra charge of one cent.

One of the Santo Domingo evangelists is now in prison meditating over the fact that to defraud the government even out of five cents may be a very serious matter in the eyes of the law. The name of this evangelist is J. P. Vasquez. His services were engaged by Mrs. M. Inez Hernandez to write a letter to her husband, who is absent from the city. After he had written the letter Vasquez asked Mrs. Hernandez if she wanted a stamp.

On her assenting he attached a five-cent stamp and collected six cents in addition to his regular charge for writing the letter.

With the addressed and stamped envelope Mrs. Hernandez went to the branch post office in the Extraduna building and, not knowing in which box to drop it, asked the postal inspector, Manuel Espinosa, who happened to be in the post office, for information on the subject. Mr. Espinosa took the letter to read the address and was about to return it to Mrs. Hernandez when he noticed that the color of the stamp was extremely dim. By still closer scrutiny he discovered that the stamp had been already canceled and the faintness of color was due to a chemical treatment that had been applied for the purpose of effacing the ink of the seal.

The inspector asked the Hernandez woman from whom she had bought the stamp and she led him to the stand of the evangelist from whom she had made the purchase. The evangelist at first denied having sold the stamp to the woman, but as two other women who had been present testified that they had seen him sell the stamp, he was taken to the police station and from there to Belam.

MYSTERIOUS DEATH

A Tombstone Boy Was Shot at Wood Camp.

Suspicious Circumstances Point to the Fact That Someone Murdered Him.

Last Saturday night word came to town that Francisco Lopez, a young Tombstone boy, was found dead in the vicinity of Slaven's gulch in the Dragoons, and that he had, presumably, accidentally killed himself or committed suicide.

Coroner Schuster immediately made an examination of the case. A coroner's jury was summoned and the body brought in. Investigation developed the fact that young Lopez was 14 years of age, had been shot through the heart and some circumstances gave rise to the suspicion that he had been foully dealt with. This was so strong that the coroner's jury refused to bring in a verdict of accidental death, and instead returned a verdict that deceased came to his death by a gunshot wound at the hands of some person unknown.

Lopez was one of a party of Mexicans at a wood camp. His three companions, who were before the jury, testified that young Lopez left the wood camp with a six-shooter to hunt some game. A little later they heard a shot, which proved to be the fatal one. The theory of suicide is unsupported from the fact that the location of the entering wound on the left side made it practically impossible to be self-inflicted, while the suggestion of accidental shooting is equally so. The firing of the shot must also have been done at a little distance as no powder marks were visible, while other suspicious circumstances leads to the belief that the young man was murdered, but who could be guilty of wreaking such a terrible vengeance on a mere boy is a mystery. The authorities have the matter in hand and are trying to solve the case. Lopez was buried in the Tombstone cemetery today, and his funeral was largely attended by Mexican friends of the family. --Prospector.

At Pearce Camp.

H. Buehman returned last Saturday from a visit to the Pearce mine and was much surprised at its great wealth yet hidden from the sun, says the Citizen. On the surface a large force of men are employed building an 80-stamp mill to replace the one lately destroyed by fire. He also visited the Black Diamond mine located eight miles west of Pearce in the Dragon mountains. Here he found Superintendent G. M. Henry and twenty American miners busily engaged in working another great property to be added to the already important copper producing mines of Arizona. At a depth of 65 feet from the surface a magnificent body of sulphide ore was encountered, a crosscut 19 feet wide does not yet expose the foot wall. Work is pushed with great energy on tunnel No. 3 to tap this body at a depth of 500 feet from the surface. Preparations are being made for the erection of a 100-ton smelter.

At Cochise station large shipments of ore are being made from different points in the Dragon mountains which is attracting much attention from mining men to that part of the territory.

A COURAGEOUS GIRL.

Frances Foley, Aged 17, Conquers a Snaggle to Discharge at Point of a Revolver.

Seventeen-year-old Florence Foley, daughter of Contractor Michael Foley, faced a burglar in her father's home in Evanston, Ill., the other day. The Foley residence is at 930 Main street. All of the family but Florence made a trip to Chicago. Just as the noon hour struck she heard the street door open, and then there was the sound of someone going stealthily upstairs to the second floor.

Miss Foley at first thought it was her father, but as several minutes elapsed without any sound coming from above she determined to investigate. She went to a desk, secured her father's revolver, and ascended the steps without making a sound. She traversed a long hall and at the rear of the building came face to face with the robber. His pockets were bulging with the loot he had collected and a watch chain dangled from his finger ends. The brave young woman realized in an instant what was the stranger's mission and she leveled the pistol at his head.

"You drop those things or I'll shoot you," she declared in clear, even tones, and the revolver never wavered from the line with his temple.

The burglar looked down the gleaming barrel, glanced at Miss Foley and poured the contents of his pockets out on the floor. When the pocket was turned inside out the plucky girl invited the robber to lead the way to the street door, where she gave him his liberty.

And as he started down the street he paused just long enough to say: "You're the gamest little wearer of petticoats in this man's town, and I'll take off my hat to you."

Sheep.

"I want to get my picture taken," said the populist statesman.

"Cabinet" inquired the photographer.

"Wouldn't be surprised, if Bryan's elected. I've been promised a 'tiptop office.'" --Philadelphia Press.
